V. Presentations/Recognition -
A. Farmer Training Program – Lee Warren, Executive Director for the Organic Growers School (OGS) shared that the agency is a 501(c)(3) non-profit and has been around for over twenty years. She provided information on the spring conference happening March 10-12 that will cover all aspects of sustainable living and organic growing. The school is place-based (exists in a particular region) and does pop-up education at farms around the region, UNCA, etc. Education is specific to the WNC region. Programs serve home growers, farmers, and help develop organic living practices.

Cameron Farlow, Farmer Program Director provided an overview of the issues facing farmers (and consumers): farmers are aging, but folks are starting to see farming as a career path. Training is part of the journey to becoming a professional farmer. Emerging, training, startup and seasoned are the various groups that education is directed toward to revitalize farming in the region successfully. With funding from the WNC Community Foundation, an understanding is gained of the significant barriers folks have to a career in farming that includes access to land, capital, markets, etc. The OGS is working to develop a series of programs to address farmers’ needs during every stage of the journey. She provided a brief history of farmer training which has been around for over twenty years now. Farm Beginnings is the newest and most robust farmer training to date. Programs are farmer-led, community-based and sustainable. Farmer to farmer training provides mentoring to beginning farmers. Lee Warren shared farmers have to be far enough along in their farming journey to have done some farming. The long-term goal is to keep farmers on the land.

Discussion occurred regarding the economic impact the agricultural community has on Buncombe County. It was shared that programs through the school focus on the 16 western-most counties. Outreach to the high country could bring OGS service there too. Lee Warren noted opportunities exist beyond WNC.

Discussion occurred about the structure of the training and it was shared that the Beginning Farmer training is classroom based and begins in April, there will be farm tours as well. To help folks decide if farming can work with their lifestyle, OGS offers a one-day exploratory workshop. Organized apprenticeships provide farm work for job seekers and assists farmers to meet their workforce needs. Justin Hembree shared that this could be a model for any sort of workforce development training. It’s outcome driven and folks have to put skin in the game to participate.

Discussion occurred about restaurants and farmers markets that source locally grown food and it was shared that the Appalachian Sustainable Agriculture Project (ASAP) works on the consumer end to connect communities to their farmers.

Discussion occurred about the high level of development pressure pushing farmers out due to the high cost of land. Allies throughout the region provide support and outreach to farmers.
Dr. Milton Byrd shared that the new Hemp Commission has just passed their rules and regulations. The ASAP and the Organic Growers School can provide models to help develop farm enterprises that will be needed for that production.

B. Transportation Demand Management Program – Ritchie Rozzelle, TDM Coordinator, shared that the program helps employers get their employees to work. Transportation modes are shifting into the future. Currently, it is single occupancy vehicle (SOV) trips, but in the future, it might be multi-people, self-driving car travels, etc. Dating back to the 1970s, TDM is a set of principles and strategies to help to get folks to work and decrease volume demands on our roads, improving the environmental impact of traffic and in this transportation region, offers choices beyond SOV, providing a dual ability to grow workforce and mitigate traffic congestion. Key tactics include connected transit, vanpool, carpool, and active transportation among others. In WNC, Using TDM principles can overcome transportation obstacles to employment and growth. Tactics that reduce traffic provide: access and mobility essential to a higher quality of life, a reliably on-time and present workforce, the ability to hire from larger areas or a previously home-bound applicant pool, reduced parking demands in city and town centers, alignment of business interests with themes of environmental responsibility, increased ridership of existing transit options, and decreased emissions improving air quality. Ritchie Rozzelle shared that transportation costs range between 15-20% of family income, varies greatly subject to fuel costs affecting household stability, etc. Program goals include increasing the number of carpool and Park & Ride users, working with local industries to offer reliable and replicable vanpool models, increasing the number of bike/walk commutes, and introducing employers to ongoing TDM consulting services, etc. The online presence for the TDM program is www.gomountain.org. He shared about Transylvania Vocational Services in Brevard whose workforce is about 80% disabled. The program has been working with them to develop a vanpool service. Grant funding is being sought for that initiative. The TVS model could be replicated for other businesses.
