Taking Care of the Caregiver

Self-Care Tips

This may be the most important page of this directory. Being a caregiver can have significant health consequences if you don't take care of yourself. One reason for poor health outcomes for caregivers is lack of Self-Care and/or finding Respite so the caregiver can get a break. Here are some thoughts to get you started.

1. Ask for Help

For many of us this is not easy. We come from hardy stock and we believe asking for help is a weakness. No one person has all the skills and energy to care for someone else. Caregiver survival depends on reaching out. We are a community and caring for each other is our greatest strength. Tap into that and ask.

2. Allow Yourself to Feel

Caregiving evokes a multitude of feelings, from resentment to anger to love to grace. Letting these feelings out through talking to a good friend, going to a support group, writing or whatever works, will increase your well-being and improve your coping skills. And the less guilt you will experience. Being kind to yourself will help you be kinder to your loved one.

3. Take a Deep Breath

A simple thing, but one that has great power. When your loved one asks you the same question for the 10th time, experience your irritation and then let it out with a deep breath before you speak.

4. Make a Self-Care List

Create a list of all the things and people you love. Start writing down one thing you can do this week, just for yourself. List one person you can call and talk with this week. Do one thing you love. Keep making these lists.

5. Wellness Programs

Check out this Directory's Listing of Wellness Programs and consider signing up.

Medicaid pays for Personal Care Services (PCS), a program that provides CNAs to assist with daily bathing, dressing and other tasks, and for the Community Alternatives Program (CAP), a more comprehensive in-home assistance service for persons at risk of placement in a nursing facility. One may apply for Medicaid at your local Department of Social Services (DSS). Subsidized In-Home Aide/Homemaker Services: CNAs or companion aides provide housekeeping, errands, companionship, and possibly bathing and other hands-on assistance through public funds for those who qualify.
